Speaker Bios:

McGavock “Mac” Reed, Jr., is an attorney from Centreville, Virginia specializing in attorney ethics. He graduated for the Catholic University of America, Columbus School of Law in 2015. His practice includes bar complaint defense, fee dispute litigation and arbitration, and disciplinary inquiry investigation. Prior to working as defense counsel for lawyers that are the subject of disciplinary actions, Mac worked at the D.C. Office of Disciplinary Counsel assisting in the prosecution of bar complaints. He is a member of the Fairfax County Conciliation Program and a Member of the D.C. Pro Bono Mediation Counsel Panel.

Ken Rosenbaum is an attorney, an environmental policy consultant, and a mediator. His bachelor’s and master’s degrees in biology and forest science are from Yale and his law degree is from Lewis & Clark. He has mediated in Virginia since 2003, where he has mentor status, and he is a charter member of the DC Court of Appeals mediation roster. His work on environmental policy often involves stakeholders in conflict. He became a student of mediator ethics in 2005, when he joined the ethics committee of the Environment and Public Policy section of the Association for Conflict Resolution. He eventually served as the committee’s co-chair and the section’s ethics point person. He has taught mediator ethics classes in Virginia since 2008.

May Program Description:

Ethics counsel Mac Reed and mediator Ken Rosenbaum return to discuss another set of ethical and practical problems for attorneys who mediate. How do you handle a party who asks you to carry across a communication that you believe may be misleading or simply untrue? What do you do if parties or attorneys appear to be recording a session in violation of the agreement to mediate? How do you handle an attorney who seems to be unprepared for the mediation? And which of these raise issues that might land you in the middle of an ethics investigation?
